We give this information not because we are fully confident of beating Bolton—we know too much about Cup football for that—or because we want to tempt fate, but simply because these arrangements have to be made in advance for the benefit of all concerned.

WHY NO SPURS VICTORY PICTURES OR A NEW FRONT COVER PHOTOGRAPH?

These are questions you will be asking—and quite rightly. The answer is because our colour processors (not our printers) were closed until Tuesday, January 4.

All will be put right in next Saturday's programme against Stoke City.

Well the win over Spurs, the draw at Southampton, and the win over Swansea was a happy sort of holiday which could not quite have a happy ending at Anfield on Monday. We make no excuses at all, but the way Liverpool are playing at the moment is such that very few teams in the world could go there with very much confidence of winning—hence their lead at the top of the Championship table. It was a happy holiday, quite apart from the three good results, in that we were finally able to bring Vladimir Petrovic to Arsenal after the long drawn out negotiations. To throw him into a League match as quickly as we did considering that he had not played a competitive game for a month was a risk we could only take with a world-class player, and it was not too long before he was giving a world-class pass from which Tony Woodcock scored a magnificent goal. We offer Vladimir a very warm welcome here—he

Those of you who saw our reply to a letter in last Saturday's programme when we said that it was unlikely that Vladimir Petrovic would come to Highbury, will obviously want an explanation. Well, because of the holiday period, the programme went to press before Christmas, and at that time we did think it was unlikely that he would come. I felt that as time went on the player was under more and more pressure from Germany, Italy and Spain—particularly from Valencia—and although I kept the pot boiling I became less and less optimistic. But a series of phone calls to and from Belgrade between 9 o'clock and the 11 o'clock kick-off time against Spurs brought the good news. The reason was Vladimir's determination to come to Arsenal. He had been here, as you know, during the summer, so he knew everybody, and when he arrived this time he went over and hung his clothes on his old peg as if he was just coming home. What a fine start he made; the through ball from which Tony Woodcock scored a superb goal was a quick indication of his class and considering it was the first competitive game he had played for a month, it was a marvellous start for him. He misses today's Cup-tie because he was not here in time to be registered with the FA to be eligible for the Third Round of the Cup.

Many Arsenal hearts were beating faster during our well earned win over Tottenham, and the draw at Southampton was a good performance, too. Southampton had enjoyed a good run in their last few games, and were buzzing quite a bit; we showed character and determination to come back from behind. The game against Swansea. Well, the way we started, I thought I was going to be able to sit back and enjoy the afternoon, and had we maintained this positive start I would have been able to. Yes, we did pull Alan Sunderland off because of injury. He had a nasty hand injury which was swelling a good deal plus a slight hamstring strain. With the game against Liverpool only a day or so away there was good reason for bringing him off. Touch wood, we are not too badly off for injuries at the moment as Paul Vaessen is recovering from his operation and we have Raphael Meade back. Injuries are part and parcel of a football club—you expect them, and the whole point of a squad system should stop you complaining, though you do when you reckon to be getting more than seems reasonable. We are hoping now that we are fairly free, and with Vladimir's arrival to lift us, that 1983 could be a good Cup year for us. We can't complain about today's draw or the home game against Sheffield Wednesday—it's always nice to be at home in the Cup, but that doesn't mean that we can afford the slightest complacency. We have trained for today's game as if we were away to Liverpool or Manchester United. For some obscure reason wrapped round a Cup-tie, today's game could be just as hard as Anfield or Old Trafford. We shall soon know.

FOCUS ON OUR

NAT LOFTHOUSE not only scored both goals the last time Bolton won the FA Cup (2-0 against Manchester United) in 1958. He collected the trophy as well. Here he is, receiving it from the Duke of Edinburgh and between them is Sir Stanley Rous, now President of Arsenal. Nat still works for his one-and-only club—he is Bolton's Executive Club manager, their "hail fellow well met," just as he was in his playing days.

Bolton Wanderers are obviously hoping for an extended run in the FA Cup this season to compensate for their predicament near the foot of the Second Division. Progression to the later stages of Britain's premier domestic knock-out competition would provide some of the prestige and financial gain that have been undermined by their disappointing League form.

It could be argued, of course, that Bolton's priority remains a rise up the Second Division table, but nothing gives a club a bigger lift than an exciting Cup run.

Bolton escaped relegation to the Third Division by one place last season and much of their form in the first half of this season has suggested they will again face a fight to stay up.

Not that Bolton will be able to glean much inspiration for today's match from their modern record in London. They have not won in the capital for four years—a run incorporating 19 League and Cup matches, of which they have lost 18 and drawn one. Their last success in Town was by 3-1 at QPR on 2 December, 1978.

But if form and tradition point towards an Arsenal victory, nobody here—least of all Terry Neill and Don Howe—would be foolish enough to take things for granted. Notoriously, the Cup is a "great leveller", and there is no doubt that the one-off situation provides teams of lower League status with an irresistible challenge.

Victories over Derby and Sheffield Wednesday in their final two matches saved Bolton from relegation last season, and initially it looked as though they might continue that type of form this season. They drew at Burnley on the opening day and followed with a 3-1 victory at home to Newcastle—Kevin Keegan and all—and four points from two matches represented an encouraging start.

Then disaster struck. Bolton lost their next five League matches and by the end of September, they were languishing in the lower reaches of the Second Division. They had another run of four defeats in October and November and, on 4 December, Bolton slipped to the bottom of the table. Curiously enough, this occurred during a sequence of five unbeaten matches, three of them goalless draws. An emphatic 4-1 win at home to Charlton on 11 December lifted them off the bottom.

VISITORS

BOLTON WANDERERS

Analysing the Bolton team, it is in many ways surprising that they have struggled to such a worrying degree. They have a number of current and former Internationals, who provide the backbone of a staff containing a lot of experience.

Defenders Steve Whitworth and Mike Doyle, who made their names with Leicester and Manchester City respectively, have both represented England. Doyle played in the 1969 FA Cup Final, when City beat Leicester. Eight months after that match, Whitworth signed as a professional at Filbert Street.

Goalkeeper Jim McDonagh is the Republic of Ireland's first choice and Jeff Chandler has also played for Eire. Player-manager John McGovern won two Scottish Under-23 caps.

Tony Henry (ex-Manchester City) and Ian Moores (who played for Stoke, Spurs and Orient before joining Bolton during the close season) are other men with plenty of First Division experience.

After Bolton parted company with manager George Mulhall, the legendary Pele was mentioned as their number one target. Club chairman Terry Edge said: "We're looking for a big name to fill the vacancy. We want a player-manager, and the first man on our list is Pele. We're very ambitious."

They failed to lure Pele to Burnden Park, but they did get a player-manager and a man highly respected in English football. John McGovern, who won League Championship medals at both Derby and Nottingham Forest, is an inspiring midfield player and he surely learnt a lot about football management by spending most of his playing career under Brian Clough.

Bolton have an impressive record in the FA Cup. They have won the competition four times and been runners-up on three occasions. This compares more than favourably with their performances in League football. Their highest final placing is third in the First Division.

Their most recent triumph in the Cup was in 1958, when they played Manchester United only a few months after the Munich air crash. Bolton won 2-0 with Nat Lofthouse, perhaps the most famous player in the club's history and a man who later had two spells as their manager, scoring both goals.

Another of their Cup victories was a 2-0 win over West Ham in 1923, the first Final to be played at Wembley.

So Bolton have tradition as well as prestige and financial reward as the incentive for an extended run in the FA Cup this season. Which is why Arsenal are taking no notice of the visitor's current League position . . . and why Wilf Dixon made a special job of assessing Wanderers when they played at Chelsea three weeks ago.

will prove himself all right as the weeks go by and he settles in, and learns a bit more of the English language. As Terry Neill tells you on his page today, Vladimir is not eligible for today's match because he was not signed long enough to make him eligible to play in an FA Cup-tie, as soon as this after his signing. He will, of course, be available for the next round should we get through this one. He is also able to play in the Football League Milk Cup tie against Sheffield Wednesday. But today we offer a welcome to Bolton Wanderers as everybody sets out on the road to Wembley—and what a long arduous road it is. We know—we have travelled it before on quite a few occasions right to the very end! May 1983 be another instance.

FROM ARSENAL PROGRAMMES OF OTHER YEARS

Season 1953–54

There have been a lot of expressions of opinion about the use of floodlights and, in some quarters, quite a lot of criticism about the large number of matches (mostly friendlies) which have taken place this autumn.

Let us not be blinded, so to speak, by the glare of the lights and make hasty judgment about something that is, after all, in its infancy in English football. True, there have been an excessive number of floodlight friendly matches in the “first half” up and down the country; some of them have not been well supported, some of them have attracted quite good crowds. There have been talk about floodlight competitions and an equal number about the inadvisability of staging too much floodlight football, thus “killing the goose”.

There are a number of factors to be considered, but to our minds there is one point which we must keep in front of us at all times and that is the primary object of the use of floodlights in football in England; that is to say the primary and ultimate object—which must surely be the eventual easing of the ever-increasing congestion of the English clubs’ fixture lists.

Today, being a Football League match, Arsenal will be wearing their normal red and white shirts and white shorts whilst Villa will be wearing their change kit of white shirts and black knickers, but next week, when we meet under the rules of the Football Association Challenge Cup, both clubs have to change in view of the similarity of the primary colours.

Villa will again wear white shirts and black shorts whilst we shall change into our newly-adopted change colours of blue shirts with white sleeves and white knickers. Although we have used these colours on several occasions this season when we have been called upon to change in away League games, this will be the first time our “Home” supporters will have had a chance to see the boys in this outfit. We think that this alternative strip is much better than the white shirts and black shorts of old (which, if still in vogue, would have called for yet another change by both teams next Saturday) and certainly an improvement upon the ill-fated black-and-white stripes which we sported in the Cup-tie against Blackpool last season.

Our defeat of Portuguesa de Desportos FC from Sao Paulo last Saturday, in the first visit of a Brazilian team to England, was more subtle than the 7–1 margin suggests. Early goals against have a demoralizing effect upon the Brazilians more so than other countries. So an early lead and the consequent demoralizing effect are the two main factors, but the other is the fact that they are not used to our climate and conditions.

Last Saturday’s defeat at Sunderland to the tune of 7–1 was a shock indeed, although there was no sign of such a run-away victory for the home side until the second-half. It is true to say that our team held its own during the first forty minutes of the game during which period we took the lead through Lishman after a very near long-shot had struck the crossbar and re-bounded into play. Ford equalised after thirty-eight minutes, but the superiority of Sunderland did not begin to make itself apparent until Elliott’s cross shot went in just before the interval. In the second-half there was no doubt about it.

The luck of Sheffield Wednesday and of Rimmer especially, was connected with a horse-shoe which had a black cat “ribboned” to it. The mascot had been taken around with the team, its resting place being the clothes peg of Rimmer, who scored in every round. In the excitement of making a trip to Wembley, Rimmer left the mascot on his peg in the Hillsborough dressing-room.

On the morning of the Cup Final against West Bromwich Albion, the assistant trainer spotted the mascot hanging there all forlorn. Obviously, Wednesday couldn't win the Cup without it. So Sam Powell took the first possible train to London. Alas, he didn't get to Wembley until the game was well under way.

During the first half, Rimmer had a thin time. At half-time the mascot was duly handed to Rimmer. He hung it on his clothes peg, and went out to play a blinder. In the last few minutes of that Cup Final, Ellis Rimmer, who had done so little early on, scored two smashing goals.

Buxted Poultry awarded a Christmas turkey to the Arsenal 'Player of the Month' for November, and also invited him to donate six turkeys to a local charity of his choice.

The winning player—selected by a local soccer correspondent—was Brian Talbot. And Brian picked The National Children's Home to receive the six turkeys.

Making the presentation to Brian is Sue Bayliss of Buxted Poultry. And receiving the turkeys on behalf of the National Children's Home is John Gray.

TOPIC OF

SECRETS OF THE ARSENAL DRESSING-ROOM

Inside all the big football grounds on match-day, the "holy of holies" is the dressing-room—visited before and after the game only by those intimately connected, and holiest of all at half-time, when occupation is rigidly restricted to players, manager, coach, medical men and the fellow who pours the tea.

When events on the field take a dramatic turn in the second half, the papers usually tell us it was all down to what the manager said in the precious few minutes' old-time reporters used to call "lemon time". Often that is true, but not always. There was the case some years ago when a team were three down at the break and, by some miracle, won the match 4-3. The reports next day told of the pearls of wisdom the manager had delivered at half-time. In truth, he hadn't said a word. He decided his team were in such hopeless form that nothing he could say or do would change things . . . so instead of storming into the dressing-room, he walked quietly into his office and had a large whisky!

Generally, though, half-time discussions are vital. So what exactly goes on, you ask? Who leads the talking, manager or coach? And what sort of things are said? Here's the next best thing to coming into the Arsenal dressing-room at half-time—Don Howe provides the background and answers . . .

"The interval is a very important part of the game. It's the time when manager and coach can 'get to' the players again . . . try and put right things that may be going wrong . . . reinforce the good habits if you are two up. You've got only about five minutes to sort things out, because time is ticking away while the players come in, sit down, while kit-man Tony Donnelly hands round the tea, and while you let them settle.

"It's not planned between Terry Neill and myself as to who is going to talk first. Obviously, on the bench during the first half, we've discussed various points. Then, when we get to the dressing-room, maybe Terry will make his comments generally and I'll go round reinforcing them to individuals concerned. Next match, it may be the other way round.

"Half-time is gee-up time. You've got to have a go at the player who is not giving enough . . . encourage the man who hasn't had the breaks in the first half. It's 'let's-get-it-together time' on the day when things have not gone too well up to the break. If you are a couple of goals up, the message is 'let's keep it going!' . . . with reminders on the lines of 'keep getting the crosses in . . . get into the box . . . let's have one more goal and kill them off.'

"While all this is going on, Fred Street may be patching up an injury, or the doctor doing a stitching job. They are working next to the dressing-room and the door is open, so they can hear the general chat we are having.

"Sometimes there's more than one injured player. Then we'll be weighing up which is the likelier to need substituting. Often you'll tell a player to give it another few minutes in the second half. Sometimes the injury will run itself off; if it goes the other way, your substitute is aware of what's in mind and will be ready to go on.

"Depending how things have gone in the first half, you can use half-time to ask a player to take a different role in the game. For example, maybe we'll want Graham Rix to play wider or close up behind the front two. You can also use the break to warn a player who has not been doing it: 'If you don't buck up, you'll be substituted early in the second half.'

"The best substitutions are made at half-time, the best tactical arrangements, too. It's true what that old American baseball coach once said: 'I always give my best half-time talk when my players are better than our opponents.'

"In those few minutes, you've really got to get down to it and put the message across. You know your players. To get one to respond, you may have to 'let him have it' in front of everybody: to another you will need to say privately, 'come on, get hold of it . . . you can give me a lot more in the second half.'

THE DAY

DON HOWE . . . says half-time is either "gee-up" time or "let's-keep-it-going" time.

"Other things are happening at half-time, too. Some players will want a change of shirt or knicks. A stud may need replacing . . . perhaps even different boots. There's no half-time radio or TV to distract; everything is concentrated on the job in hand."

And, as Don Howe says: "While you are doing your bit with your own players, in your opponents' dressing-room along the corridor, their manager, their coach are saying their piece, too . . . geeing them up if they're behind, and telling them 'If we can get one back early in the second half . . .'"

It's a serious business, of course. But there are moments of humour, too. There's always one player who can ease the situation if tension is running high. In our case, more times than not Alan Sunderland or Graham Rix will come up with some quip.

It's not always words that rebound off the dressing-room wall at half-time. Once when our old player Joe Mercer was manager of Aston Villa, he was fuming at the break because Villa were losing and playing badly at home. Arriving in the dressing-room, he spotted a tray with 11 cups of steaming tea on it. "This is what I think of you bloody lot," exploded Joe . . . and kicked tray and contents up in the air.

On Cup days like today, half-time discussions are even more important. Go out of the competition and you don't get another chance for another year. Wembley on Cup Final day has had its half-time dramas, too, as Denis Compton reveals when he recalls the 1950 Final against Liverpool, his last game for Arsenal: "After 45 minutes, I was just about all in—whacked by the pace of it. Manager Tom Whittaker had no idea how I felt as he took me aside and said 'Denis, you've got only 45 minutes of your football career left. Give it all you've got for us.'"

"Before I had time to tell him my legs had gone, he had moved on. What could I do? Suddenly, I spotted Alex James in the corner of the dressing-room . . . told him how I was feeling and said 'How do I stand up for this second half!'"

"'Leave it to me,' said Alex, and went away. Seconds later, he returned, handed me a glass and said: 'Drink this, quick.' I did as I was told, and suddenly realised that for the first time in my life I had drunk a treble brandy. Then I went out and played like a Trojan.

"We won 2-0 and Reg Lewis scored both, one in each half. For the second, I opened the Liverpool defence with a pass to Freddie Cox. So Joe Mercer collected the Cup and I collected a winner's medal . . . but if there had been substitutes in those days I wouldn't have been on the field in the second half."

There is a link between that Cup Final of 33 seasons ago and today's tie at Highbury. Bolton Wanderers, of course, were Wembley's first Cup-winners in 1923, and by beating Liverpool in 1950, Arsenal equalled their record of three victories there. We have now won the Cup five times to Bolton's four.

Letters from our Supporters

50 YEARS AGO

My parents brought me to see my first ever first-team game here at Arsenal on the day the then Prince of Wales opened the new West Stand.

I have the souvenir programme still and I have realised that this was 50 years ago on the 10th December 1932. It is strange to think that so modern looking a stand should be fast becoming an ancient monument.

Might I suggest that in the programme for our match on the 7th December you record the anniversary, perhaps with a picture of the ground before that stand was built.

Incidentally Chelsea that day played Peter O'Dowd at centre-half, one of the last of the attacking centre-halves ousted by the style perfected by our own Herbie Roberts who also played.

The League table showed us top after 17 games having scored 54 goals.

G. W. Rowley,
3 Wensley Avenue,
Woodford Green,
Essex.

Arsenal's reply:

The 7th December programme was well advanced when we received your letter, Mr. Rowley, but it is certainly of sufficient interest to print it now.

VILLA GAME

If I am lucky in having this letter published I think my views of the Arsenal-Aston Villa game will be shared by all the supporters who had the pleasure to watch such a magnificent game of football. I am extremely proud and humble to be classed as a supporter of Arsenal after their stupendous effort and hard work in a game full of the qualities lacking in football these days. Commitment, eagerness to win, sheer hard work, to mention just a few. To "all" the players (and management) a sincere thank you from all the fans for the most entertaining game of football seen in many, many years.

On behalf of myself and fellow supporters we salute you! And the best of luck for the future.

D. Flanagan,
3 Philip Court,
Hall Place,
London W.2.

PROGRAMMES

As a collector of Arsenal home and away programmes for 12 years, I hope this letter, if published, will help complete my collection. I am two programmes short, Wolves home 1973-74 and Wolves home 1975-76. If anybody can help I would be very grateful.

J. Marshallsay,
20 Sydney Road,
Whitstable, Kent.

THE COLOURS

Surprised as I was to read in the local press that Arsenal had conceded four goals at home to Watford, my amazement was complete when the following Sunday on Match of the Day I saw for the first time the Gunners festooned in blue and red circle stockings.

It is nearly 10 years since I was involved through the columns of your worthy programme in a controversy concerning the change-over from the 'famed' blue and white hoops to the all-red of the 70s, a change that had previously been discarded as unsatisfactory.

Historical record shows that Herbert Chapman inaugurated these hoops because he said 'they stand out vividly especially under adverse condition', and quite apart from the aesthetic value that became respected world-wide, results did not indicate that he was altogether wrong in his assessment.

The current fashion I feel is neither one thing nor the other. What do your readers think?

P. Goodrich,
Flat 2,
53 Gloucester Street,
Christchurch 1,
New Zealand.

Arsenal's reply:

Note: We did say no more letters on the colours but since Mr. Goodrich has taken the trouble to write from New Zealand, we felt he deserved some space.

YOUR LETTERS . . . must be kept reasonably short, and any concerning team selection or the performance of individual players will not be considered for publication. That still leaves you with a wide range of topics, so let us hear from you. Address them to: Letters Page, Arsenal Football Club, Avenell Road, Highbury, London N5 1BU.
